

VETERINARY BEHAVIOUR CHAPTER

Behaviour Veterinarians are involved in all facets of animal behaviour, from research and investigation to practical applications in management of behaviour in domestic and wild species. We give advice about animal behaviour to media, dog trainers, veterinarians, veterinary nurses, zoos and wildlife parks, welfare groups, universities and other interested groups.

We are the first port of call for owners who have animals with general behavioural issues. We are also able to diagnose and formulate a treatment plan for animals who suffer from mental health disorders. Mental health disorders are the underlying cause for more complex behaviour problems, such as maladaptive fears and anxiety, reactivity, aggression and obsessive-compulsive behaviour. These are behaviour problems are not due to lack of training, but instead can reflect an underlying medical diagnosis that needs appropriate management and treatment.

For example, behaviour veterinarians treat cases of noise sensitivity, separation anxiety, tail chasing, excessive barking, feather damaging disorder, cribbing, flank sucking, pacing, dementia, house soiling, and more. Following diagnosis, a treatment plan can be formulated, which involves treatment environmental management, behaviour modification, and appropriate medication (if indicated depending on the diagnosis).

REGISTERED VETERINARY BEHAVIOUR SPECIALISTS

These are Fellows of the ANZCVS Veterinary Behaviour Chapter or Diplomates of the American or European Colleges, who also have Specialist Registration in Australia, and so will be the best source of current knowledge and experience. Specialisation involves scholarly and technical excellence in a particular subject.

VETERINARY BEHAVIOUR RESIDENTS

These are Members of the ANZCVS Veterinary Behaviour Chapter who are currently undertaking specialist training on their way to becoming Registered Behaviour Specialists.

VETERINARIANS WITH FURTHER QUALIFICATIONS IN VETERINARY BEHAVIOUR

These are Members of the College. College Membership signifies that a veterinarian has expertise and competence in a nominated subject area. To become a member of the College a candidate must have at least four years post-graduate experience as a veterinarian and have successfully completed both written and oral/practical examinations in veterinary behaviour.

REGISTERED VETERINARY BEHAVIOUR SPECIALISTS

These are Fellows of the ANZCVS Veterinary Behaviour Chapter or Diplomates of the American or European Colleges, who also have Specialist Registration in Australia, and so will be the best source of current knowledge and experience. Specialisation involves scholarly and technical excellence in a particular subject.

Standards required for training and examination in Fellowship subjects meet the prerequisites for registration as a Veterinary Specialist in Australia and/or New Zealand.

These veterinarians have the highest level of experience and knowledge in the field of veterinary behaviour. They provide consultation services to behaviour cases referred from the general public, or from other veterinarians, including those holding MANZCVS qualifications.
